Lingering grief for Filipino tsunami victims

by Hummel

with a heavy heart

As I sit down to write this column, my heart is heavy with grief. I am thinking of the many lives lost in the tsunami that struck the Philippines on December 31, 2003.

The tsunami, which was caused by a massive earthquake off the coast of Sumatra, Indonesia, killed more than 2,000 people in the Philippines alone. The death toll is still rising as rescue workers continue to search for survivors.

The tsunami has left a deep scar on the hearts of the Filipino people. Many are still in shock and disbelief. The tsunami has also caused significant damage to the country's infrastructure, including roads, bridges, and buildings. The economic impact is also significant, as many businesses have been closed and many people have lost their jobs.

The tsunami has also caused a significant loss of life. Many people have been killed, and many more have been injured. The tsunami has also caused a significant loss of property. Many homes and businesses have been destroyed, and many people have lost their possessions.

A dangerous pronouncement, a throwback to martial law

LETTERS

THE PRESIDENT'S recent pronouncement that the United States is now in a state of martial law is a dangerous and unnecessary step. It is a throwback to the days of the Civil War, when martial law was used to suppress dissent and maintain order.
